

Serrano and Sundborg, champions of EUSA Golf 2019

The University of Málaga (female) and the University of Stirling (male) leaders in the team ranking(male)

The final of the EUSA Championship has kept the intrigue until the last moment. Although the first place in the men's category was led from the first day by Jordan Sundborg, from the University of Stirling, the second and third place was a direct confrontation between Colin Edgar (Stirling) and Mark Napier (University of Stirling too). The final silver has been for Edgar, who added 295 points, against the 297 of his teammate who was left with the bronze.

The female category has once again presented in the confrontation to the points of the players Camille Tremoulet and Esperanza Serrano. Both golfers have played the first place in the entire competition, with the minimum difference of points. Finally, the gold has remained in Malaga, thanks to Serrano with 294 points in total. The third place was for Noemi Carpinelli, of University of St. Gallen, with 303 points in total. By teams, the female victory has been taken by the University of Abat Oliba CEU, with 618 points in total, a position that has deserved the constant work of Andrea de Sentmenat and María Piñeiro. The silver has been for the University of Toulouse 1 Capitole, with 619 points and the bronze for U. Malaga, with 625 in total.

In the male category, the victory has been again for the Stirling University, a team that has shown the worth of all its players, both by team and individually. The second and third place has remained in Spain, being the silver for the University of Malaga and the bronze for the University of Navarra, with 887 and 919 points in total respectively.

Closing ceremony

The final act of the Championship has been at the Antequera Golf Hotel. The event began with the traditional parade of all the athletes, after which the representative of the EUSA executive committee, Jean Francoise Sauterau and the councillors of Antequera, Alberto Arana y Juan Rosas dedicated a few words to the participants congratulating the winners and all the players, who have demonstrated a Great ability to play golf.

Subsequently, trophies and medals were awarded to the top positions of the female and male categories, as well as individual and team. The end of the ceremony was lowered from the EUSA flag. with the background of the university anthem 'Gaudeamus Igitur'.

All of them, together with another twenty volunteers from the university and the city of Antequera, have made the success of this championship possible, where the main difficulties were in managing the arrival and coordination of the 12 participating teams.

The UMA team is one of the three European universities that has organized more international events in the last decade, in the categories of futsal, futsal, beach volleyball and handball.

Control transportation, regulate schedules, plan play times or distribute volunteers. These are some of the many functions that the technical team of the University of Malaga (UMA) has been managing for more than two months so that during the championship everything goes perfectly.

Directed by Pedro Montiel, the organizing committee of the EUSA 2019 Golf Championship with the technicians from the Sports Department of the University of Malaga. Manuel Trujillo and Eloy Cano, as responsible for coordi-
